I also know my initial tendency is to exploit. But I also expect good faith effort from my employer to provide me adequate financial compensation and a successful career path. He didn't want to do anything to jeopardize the game. As a young manager, I always try to adopt good examples of leadership from those. Given this, I think our lower level of family involvement is somewhat justified. This change would make my action rational, but would create a consistency conflict that would begin to bother me. To happily share my gifts, talents, and wealth with those who are less fortunate focus on themselves, while others talk about helping other people.
