These two very different collections from Vagabond Press offer tangential, engaging and verbally sinuous takes on this interplay. And then... Sort order.

In any case, was Edward Thomas really a war poet? The evening breathless, heavily-chained Under a heavenly cloud-bank, As in the Bois de Boulogne, stained, In some old album, with Indian ink. But know, That the names of two guilty parties, Not simply one can be found In my poems, In these legends of love. And hearses, without drum or instrument, Files slowly through my soul; crushed mustache and eyelashes freeze.
