Nov 5, - Poetry is the language of the spirit and the soul, not of the discursive mind. wisdom that can slip under the skin of the reader and enter their bloodstream. That stream emerges in every tradition as the language of silence beyond. Ultimately, it emerges in a celebration of union—the union on this earth.

typical of Victorian families.

Where the brook puts out of the roots of the old tree and flows to the meadow. We sit down, like a weed among weeds, and rustle in the wind!
Whenever a poet drags a number of these words into his verse, we say that he is prosaic; meaning by this, not that he has written prose, nor that he is simply Entering the Stream: Poems about Union in spirit and vivacity; but that he has not used the legitimate language of poetry; he has written something which is only distinguished from the ordinary dead-level of unimpassioned prose by the feet upon which it crawls.
