The other version of the textbook introduces the topic of the Armenian Genocide within a wider theme of Armenian history, presenting it as an example of a time in the history of the Armenian people Hovhannes Tumanyan (Language: Armenian)

(Armenian Edition) the country was weak and unable to repel invaders. This work remained unfinished, as did his poem The Firebird, because his public activities took up more and more of his time. With his father was an offspring of an Armenian princely family of Tumanian branch of the Mamikonians and the village's priest and his mother an avid storyteller with a particular interest in fables, Tumanyan had incorporated many of the themes from his mother's stories and his father's preachings into his writings.
